Jeff Hamilton counsels companies of all sizes, from startups to publicly traded corporations, in a broad range of transactional matters. As a practitioner, Jeff is a generalist by design. His practice ranges from fundamental transactions, such as mergers and acquisitions, including Hart-Scott-Rodino filings, to equity and debt offerings and venture capital financings, to day-to-day business management, such as fund formation, negotiating commercial agreements, assisting with corporate governance, and overseeing public company and regulated industry reporting compliance.

A few of his matters have involved, among many others, assisting clients in purchasing a wine portfolio, selling individual wineries as well as the sale of wine brands, selling a construction security company, selling a chain of pizzerias, acquiring a distillery, acquiring insurance companies and insurance brokerages, selling a parking lot management company, selling a transportation company, as well as dozens of venture capital financings and small transactions.

Jeff also counsels clients in connection with construction projects, such as negotiating construction contracts and architect's agreements for both commercial and residential projects.

Regardless of the specific situation, Jeff approaches his engagements with a combination of responsiveness and meticulousness to help his clients achieve their objectives efficiently and strategically, maximizing opportunity while managing risk.
